2.5.4 Teachers put-forth efforts to keep themselves updated professionally through In house discussions on current developments and issues in education Sharing information with colleagues and with other institutions on policies and regulations

- Teachers work hard to be professional by participating in in-house conversations about current educational advancements and challenges. Share information with coworkers. The university aggressively encourages faculty members to be professionally current - Faculty members attend a variety of seminars, workshops, and conferences to stay current.
- Faculty members have attended orientation and refresher courses in accordance with government regulations. Faculty members also participate in short-term courses and Faculty Development Programs to stay current on policies, new trends, and current advancements in education. The information and expertise learned are shared officially and informally with colleagues in order to keep them professionally up to date.
- Faculty members' writings on educational principles are published in a variety of national and international peer-reviewed publications. They also provide papers at seminars and conferences. Faculty members have written books on topics such as Guidance and Counseling, Life Skills, and Inclusive Education.
- Faculty members participate in modest research initiatives that are financed by nodal agencies. Our college's teacher educators are members of numerous educational organizations and committees at the university level, including the Curriculum writing committee, Exam paper setting, Examiners, Moderators, and so on.
